The language of the professor was dearing to be my croke, where, after we had ascended a steep path, he set me to work off an overhanging shelf of the selence, is apt after awhile to become a source of failing and boredom.

I soon got pretty tired of my work, particularly as I came across nothing that looked at all interesting. However, I stuck to it mechanically. At the same time it was not what I bargained for; was learning nothing of geology, since the man who might have instructed me means and that of a breaker of stones on the road side-a proverbially unexciting employment.

Presently, in the midst of my hammering, it occurred to me—what if this setting me at stone-cracking should be but a trick to get me out of the way.

Presently, in the midst of my hammering, it occurred to me—what if this setting me at stone-cracking should be but a trick to get me out of the way, and so leave the two men at Schonvalhof defenseless?

At the bare thought I threw down my hammer, and had already run a conaiderable way down the sloping shelf, when the idea succeeded that I ran the risk of making a fool of myself.

I'stopped and listened. The sharp tap of the Professor's hammer from beyond the next bluff reassured me. About to return to my task, I just stayed to listen the hammer's fall once more.
